

The Daily Telegraph

New mum Jodi Anasta knows how important children are so signed up as Jeans for Genes ambassador

MAY 13, 2015 10:00PM

As a new mum Jodi Anasta feels passionately about being a Jeans for Genes Day ambassador.

SIGNING on as an ambassador for this year's Jeans for Genes Day was a no brainer for first time mum, Jodi Anasta.

"It's definitely something that resonates with me very strongly being a first time mum,' Anasta told Confidential.

"It's all about the statistics, getting awareness out there and really encouraging people to jump online and get involved."

Jodi Anasta is pictured as she appears as a Jeans for Genes Day ambassador. Picture: Supplied

Held nationally on August 7, Jeans for Genes Day is a national day when people wear their jeans to raise much-needed funds for the Children's Medical Research Institute, funding research into birth defects and diseases such as cancer, epilepsy, and a range of genetic disorders.

Anasta and footballer husband Braith are parents to daughter, Aleeia.

"Our children are the most important things on this earth so this means a lot to me," she said.

Other charities Anasta is involved with include Barnardos Australia and Suicide Prevention Australia's annual Plebs, Pros and Personalities 24-hour treadmill run that was held last weekend.

Visit Jeans for Genes for more information.

"Our children are the most important things on this earth so this means a lot to me," Anasta said of Jeans for Genes Day. Picture: Supplied

Originally published as Anasta a fine fit as Genes ambassador